Point of View: What's the result of new Cuba restrictions? Lots of confusion

In December 2014 President Obama eased restrictions on travel to Cuba. A physical license was no longer needed, but travelers had to meet conditions (a license, as it were). The trip had to be, say, for a humanitarian project or educational purposes or must provide "support for the Cuban people." It couldn't involve beach time designed to improve your tan. President Trump wanted to tighten some of these regulations, and in November new rules from the Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Assets Control, or OFAC, were announced.... »
